All elements must be completed to receive credit

a. To develop your Creative Placemaking plan, try to engage diverse culture barriers, artists of all kinds, and members from the arts and culture field in the creation of your Creative Placemaking Plan. Your plan may be for a neighborhood or selected area of your community, or for your entire municipality.

b. Develop your community's Creative Placemaking Plan. - Identify defining characteristics, cultures, cultural practices, and features of the community (take care to engage with and represent the varied demographics of your community);
- Establish goals and a strategy to identify, encourage, enhance, highlight, and make accessible unique features of your local culture. Include opportunities, locations, events, etc. designed for diverse individuals of varying backgrounds and ages;
- Identify potential venues for activities (e.g. a park, theater, greenspace, etc.);
- Demonstrate how your plan incorporates the unique, distinguishing characteristics of your community (e.g. historical, artistic, economic, architectural, artistic etc.);
- Identify resources and partnerships that exist, or might be developed, to achieve the plan;
- Create or highlight opportunities for monetary and/or in-kind investments in and by public, private, and non-profit organizations and partners to help achieve the Plan's objectives;
- Include a mix of complementary community activities and services, such as housing, retail, food, services and public spaces, that could be enhanced through strategic linking to the arts or cultural central feature;

- Include steps for implementation; and
- Identify entities responsible for administration, organization, and measurement and monitoring progress.

Benefits

In creative placemaking public, private, not-for-profit, and community sectors partner to strategically shape the physical and social character of a neighborhood, town, tribe, city, or region around arts and cultural activities. A community with a strong cultural identity leverages arts, culture, and entertainment to stabilize or strengthen a given place.

Creating a cultural identity, through art and cultural activities, enhances and stabilizes communities undergoing economic and demographic changes. By connecting individuals and organizations to and within the community, art and cultural activities encourage investment in public, semi-public, and private spaces. Supporting businesses develop or grow, drawing residents and other patrons to the place and the community. Creative places also provide positive branding and image for the host community.

According to the CT Department of Economic and Community Development's Office of the Arts, the arts are integral to building and unifying our communities, "63% believe the arts lift them up beyond everyday experiences; 73% believe the arts are a positive experience in a troubled world; 62% believe that the arts help them understand other cultures better; and 67% believe the arts unify their communities regardless of age, race, and ethnicity."
