Benefits

Information, encouragement, and incentives provided by local or regional organizations increase the likelihood that people will use alternative transportation options. By completing this action, you will not only counterbalance the subsidies of parking and roads that incentivize driving, but also you will reduce carbon emissions and other negative environmental impacts, and improve employee health. Promoting smart commuting also can improve economic well-being by increasing foot traffic to local businesses, increasing the likelihood of interactions with the committee, and promoting equity by supporting more cost-effective commuting.
